Afghanistan's War With Britain Ended

Peace Is Signed After Tribesmen and India Officials Confer

LONDON, Aug. 8.—Peace has been made between Great Britain and Afghanistan. A peace agreement was signed at 11 o'clock this morning.

After the assassination of the Amir Habidullah, Khan of Afghanistan, last February, trouble developed between the British India authorities and his successor. Early in May Afghan tribesmen began an advance across the border into India. Sharp fighting developed in which British troops were so successful that in the latter part of the month the Afghans asked for an armistice. This was regarded by the British authorities as a ruse to gain time and a sharp note was sent to the Afghan commander. The fighting was resumed, and in June the Afghans again asked for a truce, the negotiations then leading up to a peace conference at Rawalpindi, late in July.

Dispatches from London in June said the British government officials were convinced that the uprising in Afghanistan was being fostered by the Russian Bolsheviki, with a view to embarrassing the British.
